Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)

Information Pack

What is ADHD?

Attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) is a behavioural disorder. Its symptoms can be categorised into 2 types of behavioural problems: inattentiveness, and hyperactivity and impulsiveness.

Most children and young people with ADHD have problems that fall into both categories, but that's not always the case. For example, some may only have problems with inattentiveness. This form of ADHD is also known as attention deficit disorder (ADD).

The main signs of inattentiveness are:

- having a short attention span and being easily distracted
- making careless mistakes – for example, in schoolwork
- appearing forgetful or losing things
- being unable to stick to tasks that are tedious or time-consuming
- appearing to be unable to listen to or carry out instructions
- constantly changing activity or task
- having difficulty organising tasks

The main signs of hyperactivity and impulsiveness are:

- being unable to sit still, especially in calm or quiet surroundings
- constantly fidgeting
- being unable to concentrate on tasks
- excessive physical movement
- excessive talking
- being unable to wait their turn
- acting without thinking
- interrupting conversations
- little or no sense of danger

These symptoms can cause significant problems in a child's life, such as underachievement, poor social interaction, and discipline problems.

How is ADHD Diagnosed?

If you think your child may have ADHD, speak to your GP. It may help to speak to their teachers beforehand. Your GP cannot formally diagnose ADHD, but they can discuss your concerns with you and refer you for a specialist assessment, if necessary.

Your GP may first suggest a period of "watchful waiting" to see if your child's symptoms improve, stay the same, or get worse. They may also suggest a group-based, ADHD-focused parent training programme. If your child's behaviour does not improve, your GP should refer child to a specialist for a formal assessment.

The assessment will be carried out by a child psychiatrist, a paediatrician, a learning disability specialist, a social worker, or an occupational therapist. There's no simple test to determine whether your child has ADHD, but your specialist will be able to make an accurate diagnosis after a detailed assessment.

How is ADHD Treated?

There is no 'cure' for ADHD. A specialist might suggest one or more of the following treatments:

- Psychoeducation
- Behaviour Therapy
- Parent Training and Education Programmes
- Social Skills Training
- Cognitive Behavioural Therapy (CBT)
- Medication

Some studies have suggested that diet (and dietary supplements) may have a role in the treatment of ADHD. However, the evidence supporting this is limited. Talk to your GP before considering any alternative treatments.

Living with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)

Caring for a child with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) can be draining. The impulsive, fearless, and chaotic behaviours typical of ADHD can make everyday activities exhausting and stressful.

Although it can be difficult at times, it's important to remember that a child with ADHD cannot help their behaviour. If you're looking after a child with ADHD, you may find the below advice helpful.

- Plan the Day

Detailed routines can help a child with ADHD cope with everyday life.

- Set Clear Boundaries

Make sure everyone knows what behaviour is expected, and reinforce positive behaviour with immediate praise or rewards. Be clear, and use enforceable consequences (such as taking away a privilege) if boundaries are overstepped. Follow through consistently.

- Be Positive

Give specific praise. Instead of saying: "Thanks for doing that," you could say: "You washed the dishes really well. Thank you."

- Give Instructions

Give brief instructions and be very specific. Instead of asking: "Can you tidy your bedroom?" say: "Please put your books back on the shelf."

- Use an Incentive Scheme

Set up your own incentive scheme using a points or star chart, so good behaviour can earn a privilege. These charts need regular changes or they become boring. Targets should be immediate (i.e. daily), intermediate (i.e. weekly), and long-term (i.e. three-monthly). Try to focus on just one or two behaviours at a time.

- Intervene Early

Watch for warning signs. If your child looks like they're becoming frustrated, overstimulated, and about to lose self-control, intervene. Distract your child (if possible) by taking them away from the situation.

- Social Situations

Keep social situations short and sweet. Invite friends to play, but keep playtimes short so your child doesn't lose self-control.

- Exercise

Make sure your child gets lots of physical activity during the day. Also make sure they don't do anything strenuous (or exciting) near to bedtime.

- Watch their Diet

Keep an eye on what your child eats. If your child is hyperactive after eating certain foods, which may contain additives or caffeine, keep a diary of these and discuss them with your GP.

- Have a Bedtime Routine

Stick to a routine. Make sure your child goes to bed at the same time each night and gets up at the same time each morning. Avoid overstimulating activities (such as TV or video games) in the hours before bedtime.

- Night Time

ADHD can lead to sleep problems, which in turn can make symptoms worse. Trying a sleep-friendly routine can help your child and make bedtime less of a battleground.

- Get Help at School

Speak to your child's teachers or their school's special educational needs co-ordinator (SENCo) about any extra support your child may need.
