In Saxon times Rothwell was the centre of a large estate. Later its importance was recognised with both a weekly market and annual fair being granted by king John in 1204. It has many springs and wells and due to their mineral content some were considered to have healing powers.

Rothwell is called Rowell by today's inhabitants but is derived from the Danish word Rodewell which means 'The Settlement by the Red Well' or 'The Clearing by the Stream where the Roe's Feed'.

Evidence of Prehistoric, Roman and Saxon occupations within the parish, were discovered during the extensive ironstone quarrying operations which started in the late 19th century.

The Trinity Monday Fair begins at 6am when the Bailiff for the Lord of the Manor of Rowell, seated on horseback outside the Church, reads the 1604 Charter of King James I. Accompanied by his bodyguards of halberdiers and the Rowell Fair Brass Band he repeats it outside each of the towns public houses. In return the ceremonial party receives a glass of traditional Rowell Fair Rum and Milk. Originally it was a four day horse fair but is now a pleasure fair which attracts thousands of visitors. (Trinity Sunday is the Sunday after Whit Sunday.)

The road leading from the Church to the High Street is called Squires Hill after the occupants of the Manor House. This building is a fine 18th century house and formerly the home of the Urban District Council. Today it is the headquarters of the National Physiotherapy Service. Opposite is the Manor Park which still retains an old fishpond.

3. Holy Trinity.
The Parish Church of the Holy Trinity is the longest Church in Northamptonshire and exhibits various periods of architecture dating back to Norman times. It once had a spire which fell in the 17th Century damaging six bays of the Church. The most interesting feature of the Church is the Chancel House or Bone Crypt which was discovered in the 18th century. When an unfortunate sexton who was digging a grave in the south aisle fell into it. Thousands of human bones are stacked in rows and pilesprobably the result of clearing the graveyard for new burials and the building of the Jesus Hospital.

5. United Reformed Church.
This Church was formerly called the Independent Chapel and has an unbroken history from 1656, in fact it is the birthplace of Midland Nonconformity.

6. Priory House
Priory House, dated 1660, is possibly built on part of the site of a Nunnery which was founded in 1247 by Richard Earl of Clare. Dedicated to St. John the Baptist this order of Augustinian Nuns was always poor and had to resort to begging. The house was demolished after King Henry VIII dissolved the monasteries.

7. Rothwell House.
Rothwell House Hotel was formerly the vicarage. It was built in the late 18th century of red brick and its central windows are framed by a giant arch.

1. Market House.
Rothwell Market House was built by Sir Thomas Tresham of Rushton in about 1577/1578. Around the top of the building is a frieze of 40 coats of arms representing Northamptonshire families. The building remained unfinished for 300 years as a result of Tresham's involvement in the Gunpowder Plot. Eventually in 1845 a flat roof was added by J.A. Gotch. Prior to this, the round stairwell was used as a local jail. The Market House has also been the office of the Urban District Council and Public Library. Today it is used by the Town Council, the Rothwell Preservation Trust and the Orton Trust.

2. Jesus Hospital.
The Jesus Hospital was an almshouse, founded by Owen Ragdale in 1585 for 24 poor men. In 1961 the buildings were internally modernised and converted into flats for six widowers or bachelors and four married couples who live rent free and have to be of pensionable age. The hospital was officially re-opened by Countess Spencer in 1962.
